MacHSR Future Leaders Fellowship program

Health Services Research training Fellowships for established front-line clinical staff, commencing July 2023.

Applications are encouraged from fully qualified clinicians (Doctors, Nurses, Allied Health professionals) who are keen to use Health Services Research (HSR) to approach practical healthcare problems and take steps towards becoming a leader of innovative care.

The program will support a select cohort of front-line clinical staff from MACH-affiliated health services to explore a problem pertinent to their health service through HSR training and solutions. Each Fellow will be released from clinical duties for one day per week for one year, on a flexible basis and without detriment to salary, to upskill in HSR knowledge and work with an expert academic supervisor to address the identified problem. Formal HSR training will be offered to all MacHSR Fellows with registration for the University of Melbourne Introduction to Health Services Research subject.

ELIGIBILITY

MacHSR is open to fully qualified Doctors, Nurses and Allied Health professionals employed by a MACH-affiliated health service at 0.3FTE or over, who want to gain HSR expertise for dissemination within their health service and show promise to become a future leader in innovative care. Applicants will have identified an important problem within their health service that could be addressed with a HSR solution and gained support from their health service manager prior to application.
